

TAKE THREE

Souk El Had

AS the Casbah was largely destroyed in the earthquake in 1960 the Souk is a great way to get a sense of a more authentic Morocco. This big, twelve door market has everything from the world's biggest watermelons to leather pouffes and live baby tortoises. Hagglers will especially enjoy it. Best in the evening between 6 and 8pm. Thirty minute walk from the sea front on Rue 2 Mars, Agadir 80090

Paradise Valley

LA Vallee Verte is an hour or so drive from Agadir, we took a Sunway organised tour (330DH / approx €30 pp, half price for under 15s) up into the beginning of the Anti Atlas mountains along the river. It was green and gorgeous, we walked through an oasis into a Berber village and had tagine for lunch with a panoramic view and stopped in a great herb/honey/argan communal business run by local women.

Club Med Dancing

WE resisted until we realised resistance was futile. And not half as much fun. The music is borderline criminal but the staff's enthusiasm is infectious and group wiggle wiggle wiggle-ing to Sexy and I Know It around the pool is, if not therapeutic, a great laugh and very much in the spirit of the place. You will never be alone, or the most ridiculous so, if needs be, make use of the all-inclusive bar and just do it.
